NOTE: The Black & White Feature Books are oversized 8-1/2x11-3/8" comics with color covers and black and white interiors. The first nine issues all have rough, heavy stock covers and, except for #7, all have 76 pages, including covers. #7 and #10-on all have 52 pages. Beginning with #10 the covers are slick and thin and, because of their size, are difficult to handle without damaging. For this reason, they are seldom found in fine to mint condition. The paper stock, unlike Wow #1 and Capt. Marvel #1, is itself not unstable ...just thin. Issues #2,6, and 27 were reprinted in the early 1980s, identical except for the copyright notice on the first page.

MARGE'S LITTLE LULU (Continues as Little Lulu from #207 on)
Dell Publishing Co./Gold Key #165-206: No. 74, 6/45 - No. 164, 7-9/62; No. 165, 10/62 - No. 206, 8/72
Marjorie Henderson Buell, born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1904, created Little Lulu, a cartoon character that appeared weekly in the Saturday Evening Post from Feb. 23, 1935 through Dec. 30, 1944. She was not responsible for any of the comic books. John Stanley did pencils only on all Little Lulu comics through at least #135 (1959). He did pencils and inks on Four Color #74 & 97. Irving Tripp began inking stories from #1 on, and remained the comic's illustrator throughout its entire run. Stanley did storyboards (layouts), pencils, and scripts in all cases and inking only on covers. His word balloons were written in cursive. Tripp and occasionally other artists at Western Publ. in Poughkeepsie, N.Y. blew up the pencilled pages, inked the blowups, and lettered them. Arnold Drake did storyboards, pencils and scripts starting with #197 (1970) on, amidst reprinted issues. Buell sold her rights exclusively to Western Publ. in Dec., 1971. The earlier issues had to be approved by Buell prior to publication.

MARVEL COMICS (Marvel Mystery Comics #2 on)
Timely Comics (Funnies, Inc.): Oct, Nov, 1939

NOTE: The first issue was originally dated October 1939. Most copies have a black circle stamped over the date (on cover and inside) with "November" printed over it. However, some copies do not have the November overprint and could have a higher value. Most No. 1's have printing defects, i.e., tilted pages which caused trimming into the panels usually on right side and bottom. Covers exist with and without gloss finish.

NOTE: The 1939 edition was published 4/29/39 and released 4/30/39, the day the fair opened, at 25¢, and was first sold only at the fair. Since all other comics were 10¢, it didn't sell. Remaining copies were advertised beginning in the August issues of most DC comics for 25¢, but soon the price was dropped to 15¢. Everyone that sent a quarter through the mail for it received a free Superman #1 or a #2 to make up the dime difference. 15¢ stickers were placed over the 25¢ price. Four variations on the 15¢ stickers are known. The 1940 edition was published 5/11/40 and was priced at 15¢. It was a precursor to World's Best #1.

NOTE: All of the above books can be ordered from the publisher; some were reprinted as Marvel Classic Comics #1-12. In 1972 there was another brief series of 12 titles which contained Classics Ill. artwork. They were entitled Now Age Books Illustrated, but can be easily distinguished from later series by the small Classics Illustrated logo at the top of the front cover. The format is the same as the later series. The 48 pg. C.I. art was stretched out to make 62 pgs. After Twin Circle Publ. terminated the Classics Ill. series in 1971, they made a one year contract with Pendulum Press to print these twelve titles of C.I. art. Pendulum was unhappy with the contract, and at the end of 1972 began their own art series, utilizing the talents of the Filipino artist group. One detail which makes this rather confusing is that when they redid the art in 1973, they gave it the same identifying no. as the 1972 series. All 12 of the 1972 C.I. editions have new covers, taken from internal art panels. In spite of their recent age, all of the 1972 C.I. series are very rare. Mint copies would fetch at least $50. Here is a list of the 1972 series, with C.I. title no. counterpart:

NOTE: Another British series entitled The Bible Illustrated from 1947 has recently been discovered, with the same internal artwork. This eight edition series (5-OT, 3-NT) is of particular interest to Classics Ill. collectors because it exactly copied the C.I. logo format. The British publisher was Thorpe & Porter, who in 1951 began publishing the British Classics Ill. series. All editions of The Bible Ill. have new British painted covers. While this market is still new, and not all editions have as yet been found, current market value is about the same as the first U.S. editions of Picture Stories From The Bible.

NOTE: The Sad Sack Comics comic book was a spin-off from a Sunday Newspaper strip launched through John Wheeler's Bell Syndicate. The previous Sunday page and the first 21 comics depicted the Sad Sack in civvies. Unpopularity caused the Sunday page to be discontinued in the early '50s. Meanwhile Sad Sack returned to the Army, by popular demand, in issue No. 22, remaining there ever since. Incidentally, relatively few of the first 21 issues were ever collected and remain scarce due to this.

NOTE: Prices vary widely on this book. Since this book is all Captain Marvel stories, it is actually a pre-Captain Marvel #1. There is speculation that this book almost became Captain Marvel #1. After Special Edition was published, there was an editor change at Fawcett. The new editor commissioned Kirby to do a nn Captain Marvel book early in 1941. This book was followed by a 2nd book several months later. This 2nd book was advertised as a #3 (making Special Edition the #1, & the nn issue the #2). However, the 2nd book did come out as a #2.

Related defects will diminish an issue's grade correspondingly rather than improve it.

These procedures may include any or all of the following techniques: recoloring, adding missing paper, trimming, re-glossing, reinforcement, glue, etc. Amateur work can lower the value of a book, and even professional restoration has now gained a negative aura in the modern marketplace from some quarters. In all cases a restored book can never be worth the same as an unrestored book in the same condition. There is no consensus on the inclusion of pressing, non-aqueous cleaning, tape removal and in some cases staple replacement in this definition. Until such time as there is consensus, we encourage continued debate and interaction among all interested parties and reflection upon the standards in other hobbies and art forms.

FEATURE ARTICLE INDEX

Over the years, The Overstreet Comic Book Price Guide has grown into much more than a simple catalog of values. Almost since the very beginning, Bob has worked hard to make sure that the book reflects the latest information about the hobby, and this has resulted in some fascinating in-depth articles about aspects of the industry and the rich history of comics. Sadly, many of you may never have read a lot of these articles, or even knew they existed.

These two pages contain a comprehensive index to every feature article ever published in The Overstreet Comic Book Price Guide. From interviews with legendary creators to exhaustively researched retrospectives, it's all here. Enjoy this look back at the Overstreet legacy, and remember, many of these editions are still available through Gemstone and your local comic book dealer.

Note: The first three editions of The Guide had no feature articles, but from #4 on, a tradition was born that has carried through to the very volume. This index begins with the 4th edition and lists all articles published up to and including last year's 40th edition of The Guide.

THE CGC STORY

How the Company Was Created and Our Grading Process

By the CGC Grading Team

CGC-certified comics are pictured throughout the Guide, at cons, and offered in all types of auctions. Expert third-party certification provides buyers confidence that a comic is accurately represented, and sellers know they are getting fair value for their comics. Certification has proven to be a popular practice: CGC has graded over 1,000,000 comics! Most collectors that see value in certification have no idea how their books come to be graded. They may not know and perhaps wonder where the grading scale came from or what happens to their books once they enter the world of CGC. Read on for a firsthand look at the process of professional comic book certification at CGC.

Bringing the Company Together

In January of 2000 CGC was launched under the umbrella of the Certified Collectibles Group, which also includes Numismatic Guaranty Corporation (NGC), the largest third-party coin grading company in the world, Numismatic Conservation Services (NCS), the leading authority in numismatic conservation and Paper Money Guaranty (PMG), the world's leading currency certification company. The Collectibles Group sought out talented and ethical individuals to grade comic books. Experts needed a history of necessary skills to verify a comic book's authenticity and to detect restoration that can affect its value. To identify these individuals, many of the most respected individuals in the hobby were consulted, and, based on their recommendations a core grading team was selected.

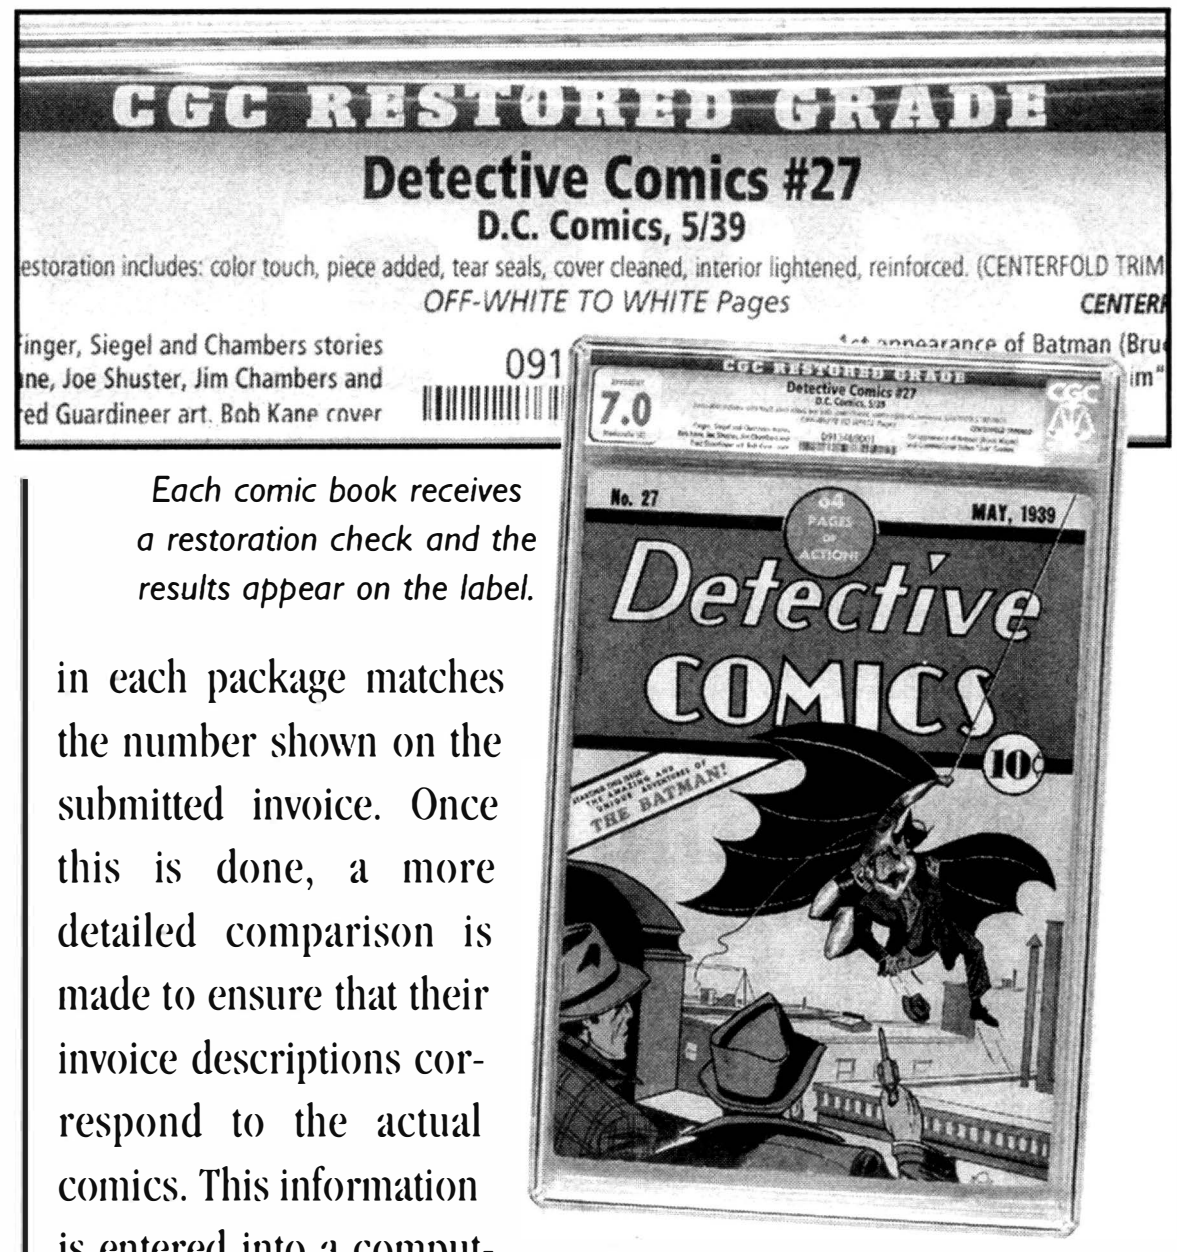
The members of the CGC grading team come from diverse backgrounds, and many were comic book dealers at some time in their careers. Experience in the commercial sector can be an essential ingredient in becoming familiar with market standards. Upon joining CGC, all graders immediately cease all commercial trading. All CGC employees are prohibited from commercially buying and selling comic books to ensure they remain completely impartial, having no vested interest other than a dedication to serving clients through accurate and consistent grading.

When it was time to develop a uniform grading standard, the hobby's leaders were once again called upon. Everyone seemed to agree that The Overstreet Comic Book Price Guide was the foundation of this standard, but there were a number of subjective interpretations of its published definitions. It was critical to understand how these guidelines were being applied to the everyday buying and selling of comics. To accomplish this, approximately 50 of the hobby's top experts took part in an extensive grading test. Their grades were averaged and an accurate grading standard reflecting the collective experience of the hobby's most prominent figures was thus developed. CGC now had the best standard and the best team to apply it.

With the graders in place and the grading scale established, the next step was to develop a tamper-evident holder for the long-term storage and display of certified comics. This proved to be a technical challenge. Exhaustive material tests were conducted to determine that the holders were archival safe. To create a true first line of defense, it was determined that the comic book should be sealed in a soft inner well, then sealed again inside a tamper evident hard plastic case with interlocking ridges to enable compact storage. The CGC certified grade appears on a label sealed inside the holder for an additional level of security.



The Grading Journey

Step 1 – Submitting your Books

There are two ways comic books can be submitted for certification - they may be submitted by authorized dealers or by Collectors Society members. The Collectors Society is an online community with direct access to certification service from CGC, and submissions can be prepared online. Both dealers and Collectors Society members typically send their comics to CGC's offices by registered mail or through an insured express company. Submissions are also accepted at many of the Comic Cons that occur around the country.

Step 2 – Comic Book Reception

Every day, CGC's Receiving Department opens newly arrived packages and immediately verifies that the number of books in each package matches the number shown on the submitted invoice. Once this is done, a more detailed comparison is made to ensure that their invoice descriptions correspond to the actual comics. This information is entered into a computer, and from this time forth, the comics will be traceable at all stages of the grading process by their invoice number and their line number within that invoice. Each book is checked to see that it is properly prepared for grading in an appropriately sized comic bag with backing board and then is labeled with a numbered barcode containing the pertinent data of invoice number and line item information for quick reading by the computer. Before any grading is performed, each book is examined by a CGC Restoration Detection Expert. If any form of restoration work is detected, this information is entered into the computer, making it available to the grading team.

Step 3 – the Grading Begins

After being examined by a Restoration Detection Expert, a book then passes to a pre-grader. At this stage the comics are properly sleeved and barcoded for grading and have been separated from their original invoice. This step is taken to ensure that graders do not know whose books they are grading, as a further guarantee of impartiality. The pre-grader begins the grading process by counting the book's pages and entering into the computer any peculiarities or flaws that may affect a book's grade. Some examples of this would be "a tear on third page," "a corner crease – does not break color," "a ¼" inch spine split," and so forth. He then enters this information, if not readily noticeable, into the "Graders Notes" field and assigns his grading opinion.

When the next grader examines the comic, he is not able to see the first person's assigned grade, so as to not influence his own evaluation. After determining his own grade for the comic, he can then view the Graders Notes entered by the previous grader, and he may add to this commentary if he believes more remarks are in order. This same process is repeated as the comic passes to the Grading Finalizer. He makes a final restoration check before determining his own grade, at which time he then reviews the grades and notes entered by the previous graders. If all grades are in agreement or are very close, he will then assign the book's final grade. It then is forwarded to the Encapsulation Department for sealing. If there is disagreement among the graders, a discussion will ensue until a final determination is made and the book forwarded.

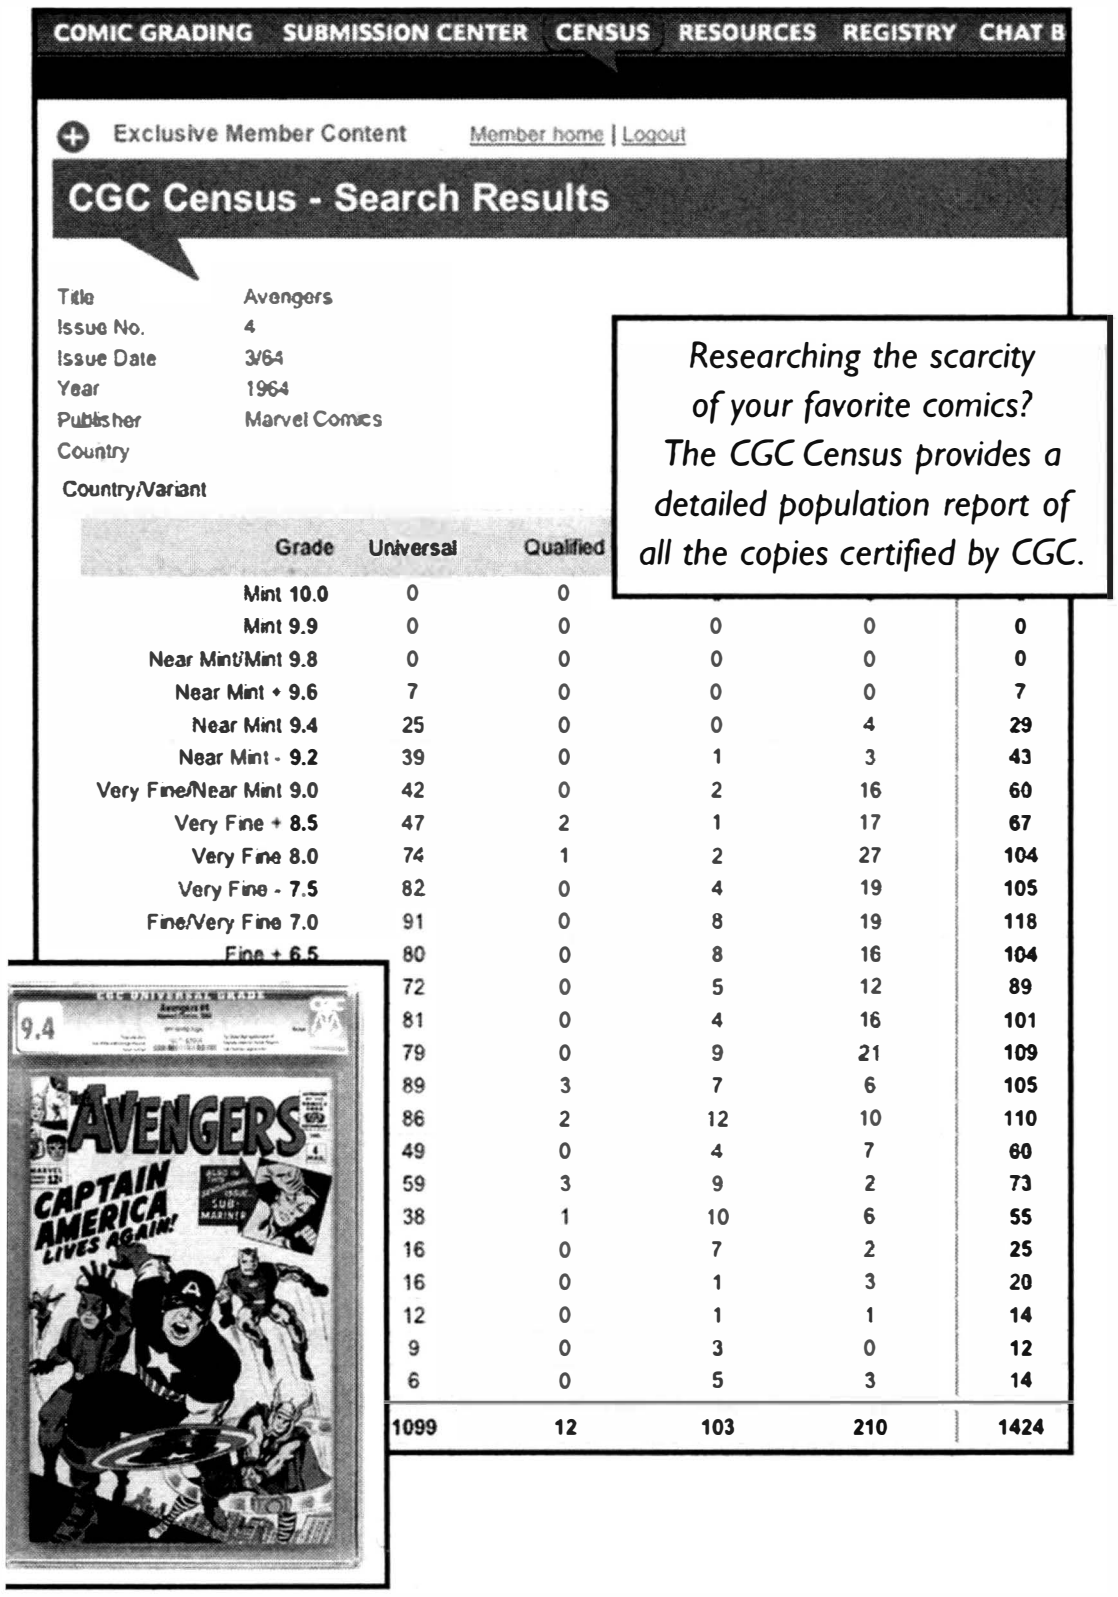
Step 4 – Encapsulating the Comics

After each comic has been graded and the necessary numbers and text entered into their respective data fields, all the comics on a particular invoice are taken from the Grading Department into the Encapsulation Department. Here, appropriately color-coded labels are printed bearing the proper descriptive text, including each book's grade and identification number. This is critical, as it serves to make each certified comic unique and is also a significant deterrent to counterfeiting CGC's valued product. All of the above information is duplicated in a barcode, which appears underneath the written text on the comic's label.



The newly-printed labels are stacked in the same sequence as the comics to be encapsulated with them, ensuring that each book and its label match one another. The comic is now ready to be fitted inside an archival-quality interior well, which is then sealed within a transparent capsule, along with the book's color-coded label. This is accomplished through a combination of compression and ultrasonic vibration.

Step 5 – The Comics are Shipped

After encapsulation, all comics are returned briefly to the Grading Department for a quality control inspection. Here, they are examined to make certain that their labels are correct for both the grade and its accompanying descriptive information. Quality control also inspects each book for any flaws in its holder, such as scuffs or nicks. While these are quite rare, CGC is careful to make certain that the comics it certifies are not only accurately graded, but attractively presented as well. When all the comics have been inspected, they're delivered to our Shipping Department for packaging. The comics are counted and their labels checked against the original invoice to make certain that no mistakes have occurred. A Shipping Department employee then verifies the method of transport as selected by the submitter on the invoice and prepares the comics for delivery or they are held in CGC's vault for in-person pick-up by the submitter.

No matter whether the US Postal Service or some private carrier is used, the method of packaging is essentially the same. The encapsulated comics are placed vertically inside sturdy cardboard boxes. In 2005, CGC developed a custom shipping box to enable the highest level of stability during shipping. A copy of the submitter's invoice is included before the box is sealed and heavy tape is used to prevent accidental or unauthorized opening of the box while it's in transit.

The barcode of every comic book is scanned before it is placed into its shipping box. The status of the book is changed to "shipped" in our tracking system, and we retain a record of what books were shipped in which box. This is the final crucial step of our detailed internal tracking system.

The CGC Label

Comic books certified by CGC bear color-coded labels that have different meanings. Whenever purchasing a CGC-certified comic, be certain to note not only the book's grade but also its label category. A Universal label is denoted by the color blue and indicates that a book was not found to have any qualifying defects or signs of restoration. There is one exception to this policy: At CGC's discretion, comics having a very minor amount of glue and/or color touch-up may still qualify for a Universal label provided that they were produced approximately 1950 or earlier and that such restoration is noted underneath the assigned grade.

As its name implies, the Restored label, identified by its purple color, is used for books found to have restoration work performed on them. The grade assigned is based on the book's appearance, with the restoration noted. A distinction is made between Amateur and Professional restoration, this judgment being based on the materials used. Since the degree of work performed is also significant with restored books, there are a total of seven possible descriptions under the Restored label. Each description is prefaced with the word Apparent, followed by Slight, Moderate or Extensive in combination with the final descriptors Amateur or Professional. Examples of Restored labels might read Apparent Moderate Professional or Apparent Slight Amateur, both descriptions then being followed by the book's grade. Finally, comics which have had no restoration other than a trimming of their covers or edges are labeled as simply Apparent, followed by their grade.

The Qualified label is green, and this indicates that one qualifying defect is present on a book. An example of such a qualifying feature would be a missing Marvel Value Stamp that does not affect the story. While such a book technically may grade 1.5, it may appear to grade 9.6. In such instances, assigning a grade of just 1.5 does not fully represent the value of the comic to a collector. Through use of the green Qualified label, a comic buyer is able to make an informed decision as to what he is purchasing in terms of its overall desirability. Because of the complexity involved, green labels are assigned quite seldom and then only when considered absolutely necessary. In addition, comic books that have an unwitnessed signature, and therefore are not eligible for the Signature Series label (see below), get the Qualified label. This is the most common use for the Qualified label. This shows what the grade of the book would have been if the signature was not present.

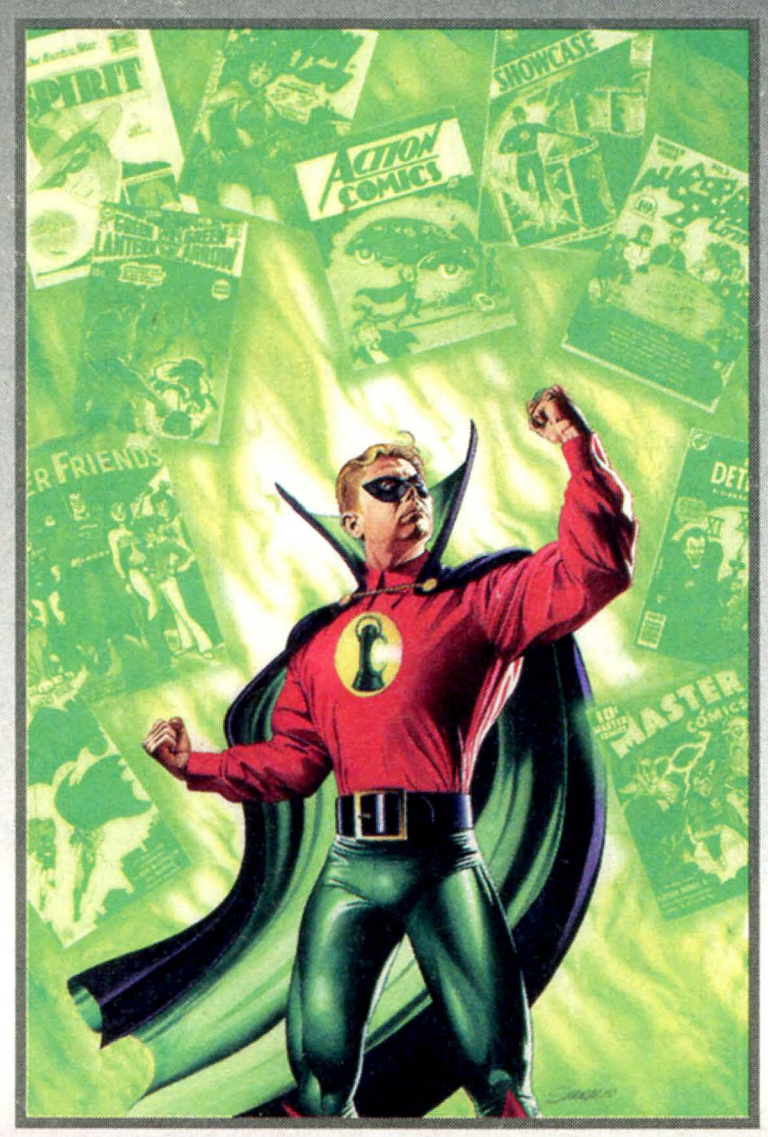
CGC's Signature Series label is yellow, and this is used when a comic book has been signed or been sketched on by a creator in the presence of a CGC representative, assuring the signature's or sketch's authenticity. Only books that meet CGC's strict criteria for authenticity are eligible for the Signature Series label. In addition to the certified grade, the yellow label includes who signed it and when it was signed. If appropriate, a Signature Series label may state where a book was signed. In 2007, CGC introduced a Signature Series Restored label. Similar to the CGC Signature Series label in color, it is differentiated by a purple bar across the top. Restoration is noted in the same fashion as on the purple CGC Restored label, and, as with the regular Signature Series label, restored books must be signed in the presence of CGC representatives in order to be eligible for signature authentication.

In October of 2003, CGC began to certify comic book related magazines. The certification process and label system for magazines is exactly the same as for comic books. Some examples of comic book related magazines CGC certifies are MAD Magazine, Vampirella, Creepy, Eerie and Famous Monsters of Filmland.

More recently CGC introduced grading and encapsulation for Sports Illustrated and Playboy magazines, Movie Lobby Cards and Photographs making us the first independent, impartial, expert third-party grading service for all types of collectibles.

For more information on comic book certification and CGC's many services, please visit their website at www.CGCcomics.com

CGC encapsulation is not limited to standard size comics. Magazines and small promotional comics are included as well.



A Signature Series encapsulation provides an assurance of authenticity for the signature. In this case, it's the perpetually protected prodigious penmanship of the legendary Stan Lee.

The OVERSTREET HALL OF FAME

The Overstreet Hall of Fame was conceived to single out individuals who have made great contributions to the comic book arts.
This includes writers, artists, editors, publishers and others who have plied their craft in insightful and meaningful ways.

While such evaluations are inherently subjective, they also serve to aid in reflecting upon those who shaped the experience of reading comic books over the years.

The general public might recognize his style from his covers for TV Guide and Time or his movie poster and promotional work for such films as It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World, Viva Max! and Kelly's Heroes, but comic book fans have long known the distinctive art of Jack Davis in a variety of genres. At EC Comics, his horror stories included appearances in Tales from the Crypt, The Haunt of Fear, The Vault of Horror, Crime SuspenStories, and Shock SuspenStories and later the "Picto-Fiction" series Terror Illustrated. His action-adventure work appeared in Frontline Combat, Two-Fisted Tales and Piracy, and his material was also seen in Incredible Science-Fiction. As much as he won fans for all of his work (including Westerns for Atlas such as Rawhide Kid), though, it was in humor where he defined himself. His work appeared in almost all the early issues of MAD (and many later ones, too), all 12 issues of Panic, as well as Trump, Humbug, Help! and even Cracked.

In 1931 Martin Goodman joined with future MLJ Magazines (Archie) co-founders Louis Silberkleit and Maurice Coyne to start pulp magazine publisher Columbia Publications. In 1932 he started his own business. His first publication was Western Supernovel Magazine, which premiered in May 1933, and he began building a variety of publishing companies from there. Under his umbrella came Mystery Tales, Real Sports, Star Detective, Marvel Science Stories, Ka-Zar and others.

In 1939, he contracted with Lloyd Jacquet's Funnies, Inc. to provide the content for what became Marvel Comics #1, which featured the Human Torch and the Sub-Mariner. With that comic as a hit, he hired his own staff, starting with writer-artist-editor Joe Simon. Timely Comics was born. A few years later, he hired his nephew by marriage, Stan Lee, as editor.

Eventually Timely Comics became Atlas Comics, and Atlas Comics became Marvel Comics. After selling Marvel in the late 1960s, he started a new Atlas line in 1974. While it didn't last at the time, it has recently been revived by his grandson, Jason Goodman.

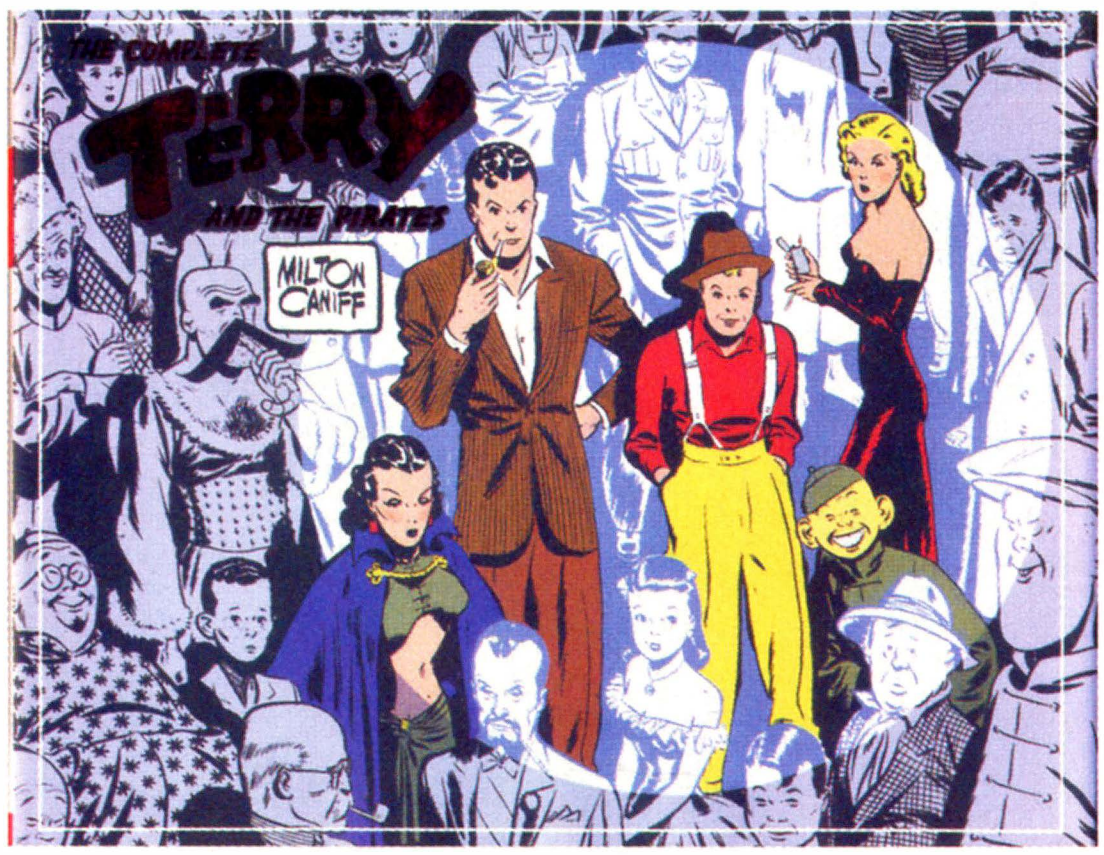
In 2007, Dean Mullaney created IDW Publishing's archival imprint The Library of American Comics, which he edits and designs. Almost immediately his efforts began to usher in a new Golden Age of classic comic strip reprint collections, significant in both the material itself and the manner in which it is presented. In its first four years, LoAC has been nominated for nine Eisner awards and other accolades, and it has been called "the gold standard for archival comic strip reprints."

Under his guidance, Milton Caniff's Terry and the Pirates, Alex Raymond's Rip Kirby, Chester Gould's Dick Tracy, Harold Gray's Little Orphan Annie, Archie Goodwin and Al Williamson's Secret Agent Corrigan, Chic Young's Blondie and other strips have been showcased for seasoned fans and new readers alike.



In 1978, he launched Eclipse Comics when he published Don McGregor's Sabre, the first graphic novel created for the comics specialty market. Eclipse championed creator ownership and the first line of Japanese manga in English translation, and had the first digitally-colored comic book.

Beginning with coloring A Moon, a Girl... Romance #9 (October 1949), Marie Severin became a highly regarded contributor to EC Comics. There she labored on the company's whole line, including the horror, action-adventure, science fiction and humor titles ranging from Crime SuspenStories to MAD, often working closely with her brother, artist John Severin, and writer-artist-editor Harvey Kurtzman. While noted as a colorist, she became highly capable in most artistic roles, including penciling, inking and lettering. When EC closed down, she worked at pre-Marvel Atlas before the industry took a downturn and she left. She reentered the business shortly before Atlas became Marvel and was there for the Silver Age growth. While continuing to color and deal with production issues, she illustrated Captain America, Captain Marvel, Daredevil, Strange Tales (taking over Doctor Strange from Steve Ditko), Sub-Mariner, Tales to Astonish, and X-Men. Her EC background (and perhaps her work with Kurtzman) influenced her wonderful stint on Marvel's self-parody series Not Brand Ecch!

While attending the Rhode Island School of Design, writer-artist Walt Simonson created Star Slammers, a different version of which years later would become Marvel Graphic Novel #6 and later a Star Slammers series from Malibu's Bravura imprint. Between those two periods he established himself as a creative force, chiefly with the award-winning Manhunter back-up feature in Detective Comics, on which he collaborated with writer Archie Goodwin. Following work on DC's Metal Men and Hercules Unbound and Heavy Metal's Alien adaptation (again with Goodwin), he made his way to Marvel. Beginning with Thor #337, Simonson wrote and illustrated a definitive run on the title, eventually ending with Thor #382. Over the years, his other Marvel work included Battlestar Galactica, Star Wars, Fantastic Four, The Avengers, X-Factor (with wife Louise Simonson) and others. At DC, among other work, provided covers for Jack Kirby's Fourth World, wrote and illustrated 25 issues of Orion, illustrated Elric: The Making of a Sorcerer, and wrote the Catwoman and The Demon strip in Wednesday Comics.

Honored in 2008 with a posthumous Eisner Award for his contributions to the comic book industry, Major Malcolm Wheeler-Nicholson might have become the forgotten titan of comic book history, except for the efforts of comics historians. The former soldier, adventurer and inventor was also a successful and prolific author and in the 1920s he made a solid living from writing novels and short stories, often for the pulp magazines. When the Great Depression forced him and his family to move back to New York from Europe, he turned his attention to a new enterprise.

Comic books had, of course, been around in one form or another, for more than 90 years, but they had almost exclusively been collections of reprinted newspaper comic strips and priced for adults. Wheeler-Nicholson not only wrote and commissioned original content, he priced them at 10¢. In 1934, he launched New Fun Comics. DC Comics – and with it a new form of the comics business – was born.

Arguably the most influential person in American comics, Will Eisner, as artist, entrepreneur, innovator, and visual storyteller, enjoyed a career that encompassed comic books from their early beginnings in the 1930s to their development as graphic novels in the 1990s. During his sixty-year-plus career, Eisner introduced the now-traditional mode of comic book production; championed mature, sophisticated storytelling; was an early advocate for using the medium as a tool for education; pioneered the now-popular graphic novel, and served as inspiration for generations of artists. Without a doubt, Will Eisner was the godfather of the American comic book.

The award-winning full-length feature film documentary includes interviews with Eisner and many of the foremost creative talents in the U.S., including Kurt Vonnegut, Michael Chabon, Jules Feiffer, Jack Kirby, Art Spiegelman, Frank Miller, Stan Lee, Gil Kane, and others.

The Avenger of Blood

By Rob Hughes

"By the fear of the Lord men depart from evil", and there are many sides of the Almighty.
Many manifestations in which He has revealed Himself to mankind.
To the chosen elect, He is the Everlasting Father, faithful protector of great compassion and everlasting mercy. For others, He is the mysterious and greatly feared Lord of Hosts known only from ancient tales of awe inspiring miracles, magnificent deliverances and epic battles.
But woe to the evil and them that work iniquity.
To these He is a God of inescapable vengeance whose anger kindles hot as he pours out his blazing fury in the terrible visage men know as

The Spectre

Famous Spectre splash panel (used in More Fun Comics #57–#65) revealing the hero's secret identity and his divine purpose. This particular splash is from issue #60 (Oct., 1940) and represents one of the most memorable of all Golden Age images. Artwork by Bernard Baily.

The first of all supernatural superheroes materialized into existence at the dawn of the Golden Age of comic books. Writer Jerry Siegel (who had previously, along with artist Joe Shuster created the greatest of all superheroes: Superman in Action Comics #1, June, 1938) teamed up with a relatively unknown artist named Bernard Baily (who would also create the Hourman for Adventure Comics #48 in March, 1940) to bring forth the most awesome and ultra-powerful character this side of the Almighty Himself.

Drawing from the various ghost stories appearing in the classic pulp title Weird Tales, Siegel brought to life a dark and forboding hero that was, in so many ways, just as original a concept as Superman. He certainly was more powerful. In fact, his powers seemed almost limitless. An eerie being who had been directly empowered by, and granted divine authority over life and death from the Lord. In a private and rarely granted interview, Siegel explained that he wrote the "mysterious, heavenly voice", (that first appeared in the two-part origin story) as God's own, personal voice. Thus, making the Spectre a very special creation. His sacred mission: To utterly destroy all forms of evil and corruption and wipe clean criminal activities from the face of the Earth. Judgement Day had arrived. A reckoning was due.

The Genesis occurred in More Fun Comics #51 (January, 1940). Readers took their very first glimpse of the Spectre in a small, one panel teaser advertisement at the end of the Buccaneer story announcing, " 'The Spectre!' Who is he?? What is he?" Who and what indeed. For here in this small panel appeared an odd looking character with a lime-green face, royal blue chest and adorned in a purple hood and cloak. A diamond in the rough. A few color alterations and the final polishing needed to be made before the power could be unleashed.

1940. The golden year of the Golden Age. The Spectre appeared full blown and stoically intimidating as he confronted a group of frightened thugs on the cover of More Fun Comics #52 (February, 1940) This landmark issue would mark the only time in which the Spectre utilized a blue hooded cloak and trunks. Forest green became his trademark color for the duration of his career hereafter. The splash panel of this debut issue introduced him (in costume) as "The 'Spectre', a supernatural being whose mission on Earth is to stamp out crime and to enforce justice with the aid of such weird powers as becoming invisible, walking through walls and delivering death with a glance..." His origin is perhaps the most tragic and darkly ironic in all comic history.

The two-part Golden Age classic opens with the "hard boiled", tough as nails detective Jim Corrigan sharing a private moment with close friend Wayne Grant as he prepares to attend an engagement party with his wife-to-be Clarice Winston; "A beautiful and wealthy young socialite." One of Corrigan's informants named "Stodie" tips him off to a fur heist that will go down that very night at the Westmore Warehouse. Corrigan arrives on the scene and single handedly takes out a quad of thieves with a combination of right hooks and left uppercuts. Infuriated that this young and fearless detective has interfered and once again spoiled his plans, "Gat" Benson, a mobster gang leader, kidnaps Corrigan and Clarice and takes the couple to an abandoned warehouse on the waterfront. One of "Gat's" men cold clocks Jim from behind and places him in a hollow barrel, fills it to the rim with water and cement, and heaves the wooden tomb into the cold river below. Jim Corrigan dies. "Up toward the streaming light ahead streaks Jim's figure at infinite speed..." At the gates of Eternity, Jim's spirit hovers before the Lord (represented in a large commanding voice) who speaks to the detective from a brightly lit cloud; "Listen Jim Corrigan and you will learn...Your mission on Earth is unfinished...You shall remain Earthbound battling crime on your world with supernatural powers, until all vestiges of it are gone!" Corrigan's protests go unanswered as his spiritual essence hurls back down across the cosmos to the bottom of the river. Shocked at the sight of a lifeless hand protruding out from a barrel of cement, Jim realizes he is looking at his own slain physical body. He vows vengeance on "Gat" Benson and quickly discovers his ability to fly, suspend in midair, turn invisible, and perform any feat he wishes. Part one closes with Corrigan rushing to save his beloved Clarice from the clutches of Benson and his murderous gang.

More Fun Comics #53 (March, 1940) begins with Corrigan gliding through the warehouse wall to confront his slayers. As one of the gangsters turns to shoot Clarice, Jim fixes his eyes upon the criminal and inaugurates his famous Death Stare which would become The Spectre's grim, unmistakable calling card in the years to follow. The gangster collapses to the floor dead. A second thug named Ricky advances to finish off Clarice (who has fainted) but Corrigan stands in the gap and wills the would-be killer to age at a furiously rapid rate until only a skeleton remains. Jim states, "You've robbed, you've killed and this is your reward. Die!".

Benson flees in utter terror but Corrigan heads off the gang leader. In desperation, "Gat" reels and fires at Clarice. The bullet finds its mark as Jim rushes forward to touch Benson, sending him into unconsciousness. Jim discovers he has gained even more amazing abilities for as soon as he touches his fiancée, "No wound! As soon as I touched it - it Healed Instantly." Realizing that he could never again lead any sort of normal life, Corrigan breaks off the engagement with Clarice and returns home in painful solidarity.

Within the lone confines of his room, "Jim busies himself constructing a strange costume" stating, "I'll continue to be Jim Corrigan, detective - but when I battle crime as The Spectre, I'll cloak my identity in this costume!" And thus, as a lone, tortured figure gazes up into the twilight pondering his colossal mission, his skin transforms into a murky gray, the pupils of his eyes disappear, and with the donning of a kelly-green hooded cloak, gloves, trunks, and low-cut boots the Spectre vows, "I shall not be satisfied until criminal activities on this Earth are a thing of the past!! And since that day, a lonely man has walked the Earth...A man both more and less than mortal. For the day Jim Corrigan died...The Spectre was born!"

Soon after this phantom's arrival upon this mortal planet, a warning spread like wildfire throughout the underworld: "If the Spectre was after you, say your prayers because you were as good as dead." Doomed evil doers began fleeing in every direction like frightened rats. During the next five years, they began to realize that their lives, yea, rather their immortal souls hung in a delicate balance with this terrifying ghost lurking about. In his informative book Over 50 Years of American Comic Books, Ron Goulart describes the Astral Avenger as "the most intimidating of all superheroes. As much a figure of horror as a good guy...A grim uniquely talented chap, the Spectre didn't just collar crooks - he enjoyed himself by destroying them." And exterminate these criminal roaches he did, since it was the only way of attaining the salvation of eternal rest his soul so earnestly longed for.

In Peter Sanderson's commentary, The Dark Justice of...The Spectre, Michael Fleisher, (who would eventually script the most prolific and controversial series ever published on the character) writes; "In general, I very much liked the kind of raw, rough-edged quality that a lot of comic book characters had in their earliest appearances. The Spectre was for me sort of a vengeful Old Testament God-like character, wreaking vengeance from beyond the grave."

"In the original Spectre series, Jim Corrigan is engaged to Clarice Winston and he gets killed by gangsters. But God allows him to walk the Earth as a Spectre, though Clarice doesn't know he's dead. Corrigan walks up to her and breaks their engagement. He's decided that he's separated from the realm of mortals and has to sever his links with them."

The Spectre demands a full confession with the terrible threat of a walk through the Valley of Death. From More Fun Comics #55.

"[Corrigan] was now committed to a life in which all he expressed was his anger. His mission was to exterminate evil, but he didn't have a real life. He didn't have real loves and real friendships. He didn't have recreation and relaxation and the joy of real living. He only has that he was some sort of divinely appointed executioner."

Detective Corrigan began his new existence by opposing a spiritualist named Rhani-Set who was deceiving and extorting money from Clarice's mother. goals, Corrigan transforms into his wrathful identity and confronts the evil swami. Rhani-Set fires his pistol and the deadly bullet speeds toward the helpless girl. At that very instant, time itself is halted as the Lord raises his servant up to stand before Him revealing, "Jim Corrigan - once again judgement is to be passed upon you! We have relented - your mission is too gigantic for one individual - you shall be permitted to pass on to eternal rest!" Corrigan pleads, "But I can't pass onto another world now, as much as I'd care to! Clarice is in danger. She needs my help!" The Lord answers, "The decision is yours! Eternal rest or eternally Earth-bound! What is your answer?" And thus, "For Clarice's sake, Jim dooms his soul to the bitter fate of forever haunting Earth!" by stating, "I choose to remain Earth-bound!" The Lord concludes "So shall it be!" and sends the Spectre back to Earth to save his beloved from certain death. He does. Rhani-Set and one of his henchmen turn and shriek in horror as "The Spectre permits them to glimpse death in his eyes, and die of fright." A final caption summed it up; "Now doomed to haunt crime and the world forever, The Spectre begins his lone battle against the underworld in earnest."

The Spectre uses the dreaded "Death-Stare", as his huge eyes pierce into the black soul of a helpless thug. From More Fun Comics #59.

The Spectre's gray complexion paled to a pasty white with the release of More Fun Comics #55 (May, 1940). Even more amazing abilities would come forth as Detective Corrigan reads the guilty thoughts of Simmons, the 1st National Bank bookkeeper who had been embezzling money from his employer. Corrigan transforms and commands Simmons to confess his crime or walk into the Valley of Death with his grim alter-ego. The bookkeeper quickly agrees and turns himself over to the authorities. This issue also introduced the Spectre's first supernatural nemesis; Zor - a spirit confined to Earth to spread evil. With the Lord's intervention, the Spectre captures Zor in his own "Paralysis-Ray", leaving the wicked spirit in stationary isolation for all eternity. Returning Clarice to her home, Corrigan would once again have to subdue his emotions and compassion for his lost love by saying, "As Jim Corrigan I loved you Clarice deeply! But now I am the Spectre! My work is to destroy evil and to that end I dedicate myself."

The most famous and recognizable depiction of the Spectre appeared for the first time in More Fun Comics #57 (July, 1940). This gloomy and alluring splash panel (used until issue #65) would become a true Golden Age classic and prepared any unsuspecting or faint of heart readers for this solemn hero and the dark tale that followed.

fiery indignation and smite wrongdoers in the most horrifying means. A lasting impression was graphically etched into the minds of these wicked murderers. In More Fun Comics #58 (August, 1940) an arsonist named Pete received this lesson in spades as he planned to burn a warehouse to cinders with the owner tied to a beam inside. With no more effort than a slight wave of the Spectre's hand, the flame freezes into a harmless icicle. In disbelief, Pete looks upon the face of death reflected in the ice and straight forward melts into a formless mound of goo, "consumed by the villainy within him." Another mobster, after being cornered at every turn asks this relentless hunter "What manner of creature are you?" The Spectre replies, "I'm your sins, Morris and I've finally caught up with you!" With desperate, escape minded law-breakers speeding away, the dark wraith enlarges to immense stature in front of their on-rushing automobile to easily reach down and hurl them into interstellar space. Crime and pollution eliminated with one throw. Soon afterward, when he offered an award by Bob Brant whom this guardian angel had saved from an untimely death on several occasions, the Spectre explains, "I seek no reward! My only desire is to see justice done! Good Bye!"

Introducing himself in More Fun Comics #59 (September, 1940) as "A ghost who has a strong dislike for thieves and murderers," to a small-time hood named Mulligan, the Spectre explains, "you represent the type of vermin I've sworn to stamp out of this world." Stamp right out of existence in fact. He tread down these fugitives like mire in the streets. This dreaded phantom came to devour and purify the very essence of evil. There was no hiding. No escape. Issue #60 introduced the power-mad Xnon. A scheming kidnapper who wielded a power-rod that enslaved and almost forced the Spectre to perform a hideous crime of mass murder. The Almighty intercedes at the last crucial moment and grants his ambassador to Earth "The Ring of Life and of Death! No man made mechanism is capable of resisting it!" After a full hearted thanks to his Creator, the Spectre rushes through the cosmos to do battle once again with Xnon. Imprisoning the would-be-conqueror at the center of a meteor, the victorious hero concludes, "and so ends Xnon and his mad ambitions."

More Fun Comics #65 (March, 1941)
Famous mirror cover as the Spectre confronts two terrified jewel thieves. Baily cover art.

The Spectre would soon adapt the uncanny ability to sense the presence of evil as if it were a tangible entity calling to him for punishment. The timely spook thwarts an assassination attempt on the President of the United States in More Fun Comics #62 (December, 1940), "as the thug fires, the face of the Spectre appears between the Chief Executive and the bullet! The 'Man of Darkness' opens his mouth and swallows the bullet!"

As a keen weapon of God's wrath, the Spectre was continually called upon to oppose evil spirits and various other super-powered beings, banishing them from Earth forever. In More Fun Comics #63 (January, 1941), he pursued a revenge-seeking soul named "Trigger", ultimately forcing him to recess into nothingness due to the bright and brilliant glow of "the Ring of Life." More Fun Comics #64 (February, 1941) reveals a rare glimpse of the Spectre's compassionate side as he heals his close friend of a life threatening fever. "You've given me life!" as the fever miraculously departs. The Ghostly Guardian's strange and unique ability to look back across the sands of time, to the very past itself, manifested in More Fun Comics #65 (March, 1941). He used this power to bring a jewel thief calling himself "the Blue Flame" to justice (giving his alter-ego Jim Corrigan full credit for the capture). It would also be in this particular issue that the twilight superhero would be referred to as "the Dark Knight". A recognizable title that was later attributed to one particular manhunter who patrolled Gotham City by night.

More Fun Comics #66 (April, 1941) brought forth a hateful villain with world domination as his agenda; the Black Doom. The tale opens with gargantuan werewolf-like monsters rampaging through the street of Cliffland. Havoc, destruction and utter chaos following in their wake. As the Spectre soars to intercept these wild marauding beasts, a weird drum beat seems to summon them to return from whence they came. Discovering another dimension existing inside a prehistoric painting hanging in the downtown museum, the Spectre dives into the picture and beholds a strange leader of dark intent; "What a Man! A face as evil as Satan. Fiery eyes as foreboding as a flaming pit. A conglomeration of all the qualities that make up a repulsive, unclean thing; the Black Doom!" This demonic dictator strikes out at our hero, encircling him in a black cloud of dense vapor. Nevertheless, this avenging ghost is completely relentless and undaunted in his quest to crush and stamp out evil and, "with astounding swiftness, the forces of darkness shrink to reveal the Spectre surrounded by a protective glow of pure light." The God-like hero from Heaven speaks to his adversary, "You forget that good is more powerful than evil." Reducing the army of maddened monsters to harmless oily fluid, the Spectre leaps out from the ancient painting and straightway destroys the art work in a burst of flame summing, "Thus perishes the gate to reality! And thus also ends the menace to mankind."

More Fun Comics #67 (May, 1941)
Classic and last Spectre cover for this title. The hero's dark and mysterious appeal was fast becoming a byword, and soon he would be a back-up feature. Cover art by Baily.

More Fun Comics #67 (May, 1941) marked the very last time the Spectre would adorn the cover of this title. By issue #101 he was gone altogether. The dreadful spirit of wrath who had once invoked trembling terror for any law-breaker unfortunate enough to cross his path, had lost his unique appeal. He had, like several other Golden Age superheroes, fallen away from his dark roots, mysterious inception and gloomy surroundings to be thrust into the spotlight of recognition and familiarity. The enigmatic primal power vanished. This killed The Grim Avenger and bound him to a death from which he would not be resurrected in his full glory for nearly 30 years.

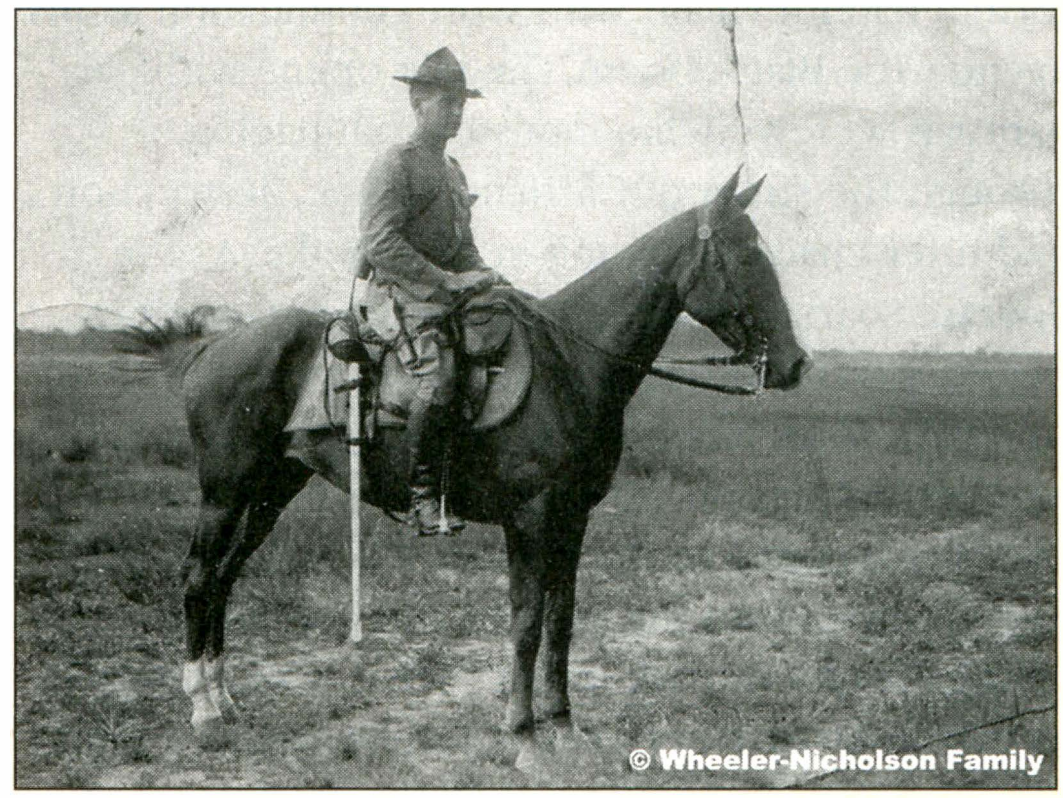
AN ORIGINAL

Major Malcolm Wheeler-Nicholson

A DC PUBLICATION



By Nicky Wheeler-Nicholson Brown

Major Malcolm Wheeler-Nicholson was honored with a posthumous Eisner Award in 2008 for his contributions to the comic book industry. His background was a mystery to many comic book fans and historians. So who is this guy—the Major—and what did he do that was so important?

It's not easy to squeeze a life full of adventure and accomplishments into a couple of paragraphs, so…a few highlights: Malcolm Wheeler-Nicholson was born near Greeneville, Tennessee on January 7, 1890 and spent his childhood there and in the Pacific Northwest. He had quite a career in the Army, all of it verifiable in military records.

MWN served under General Pershing on the Mexican border chasing bandits and revolutionaries, among them probably Pancho Villa, while commanding Troop K of the historic African-American Buffalo Soldiers. By 1915 he was in the Philippines breaking world records for machine gun readiness and in his off-duty moments winning polo cups.

During WWI he was in Military Intelligence and in 1917 was in Siberia attached to the Japanese Embassy. He saw first hand the cruelty of the Cossacks towards the local peasantry as well as the nuances of the constantly changing alliances between the Chinese and Japanese, the Cossack chiefs and Bolshevik Revolutionaries. These real life experiences would later appear in adventure stories and in his non-fiction articles and books.

Enter the roaring twenties and the Major is posted to Paris. There he met Elsa Karolina Bjorkbom, a Swedish woman of aristocratic background. After a fairytale proposal in the Eiffel Tower, they were married in the Kaiser's Chapel in Koblentz, Germany. MWN became concerned that poor leadership as a result of Army promotion practices was a direct cause of great loss of life during WWI. With the hubris of youth he brought this to the attention of Army leadership. Somebody in the top brass wasn't too keen about this and he was recalled to Fort Dix in 1921. There was a dramatic assassination attempt in the dark of night and miraculously he survived. A court martial ensued. He was acquitted of all charges except that of publishing an open letter to President Harding, and he discharged from the Army in the very last days of 1922.

That's a lot of adventure for anyone's life but that was just the beginning. MWN began writing adventure stories and published a work of non-fiction in 1922. Over his lifetime he wrote at least 117 short stories, novels and serials, not including reprints and appearances in foreign editions. In addition there are several novels in hardback and paperback and works under two known pseudonyms. But wait there's more—comic scripts and non-fiction.

The Major's first venture as a writer of comic scripts and a publisher was in 1925 working with colleagues like screenwriter N. Brewster Morse and artist Oscar Hitt. Robert Louis Stevenson scholars note MWN as the first person to publish RLS in comic strip form and comic book format. Classic Comics and graphic novels anyone? Like a lot of creative people MWN wasn't all that great with the details of business and by the end of 1926 the venture was at an end.

MWN was a popular writer and in 1928 he was able to move the family to France so that Elsa could be closer to her family. He continued writing for the pulps while living in Paris and an ancient chateau in Vic sur Aisnes. Unfortunately the Great Depression caught up with the Wheeler-Nicholsons and they were forced to return to New York in May of 1930. It was harder and harder to make money writing for the pulps and support a family of seven so what did the Major decide to do in the midst of the Depression? Why—start a comic book publishing company with the unique idea of using all original art and scripts instead of reprints from newspapers.

Surprisingly it turned out to be a very good idea but somebody else ended up making the money. Sound familiar? Even worse, others have been credited with his ideas and hard work and MWN's contributions have often been denigrated. In fact, Major Malcolm Wheeler-Nicholson began the company that is still with us some 75 years later as DC Comics. MWN's original comic book New Fun Comics arrived on the newsstands in 1934. Based on his writing for the pulps it was his idea that these original scripts should be full of adventure and action and he wrote many of those scripts. In 1937 he entered into a new venture with Harry Donenfeld's financial backing and Jack Liebowitz as his partner. The new venture? Detective Comics or DC Comics with Action Comics already in the works.

MWN had the foresight to recognize and nurture talent so after sending him the first drawings of Superman he promptly hired Siegel and Shuster. In 1935 they appeared in New Fun. Jerry Siegel said they never would have made it into print without the Major's help. Bob Kane (Batman) was also one of the early artists that the Major hired and there are many others—artists, writers and editors who went on to make their marks in comic book history. Donenfeld may have been the consummate salesman and Liebowitz the financial whiz, but without the Major's creative vision they'd be known today as the publishers of Spicy Detective.

What happened after that auspicious beginning is a tangled tale. The upshot was that against his will the Major was forced out of the company he founded. Although it was a crushing blow, being a disciplined soldier, he picked himself up and returned to writing. During WWII the Major wrote three books of non-fiction that were well received beginning with Battle Shield of the Republic as well as numerous articles in Look and Harpers Magazine among others.

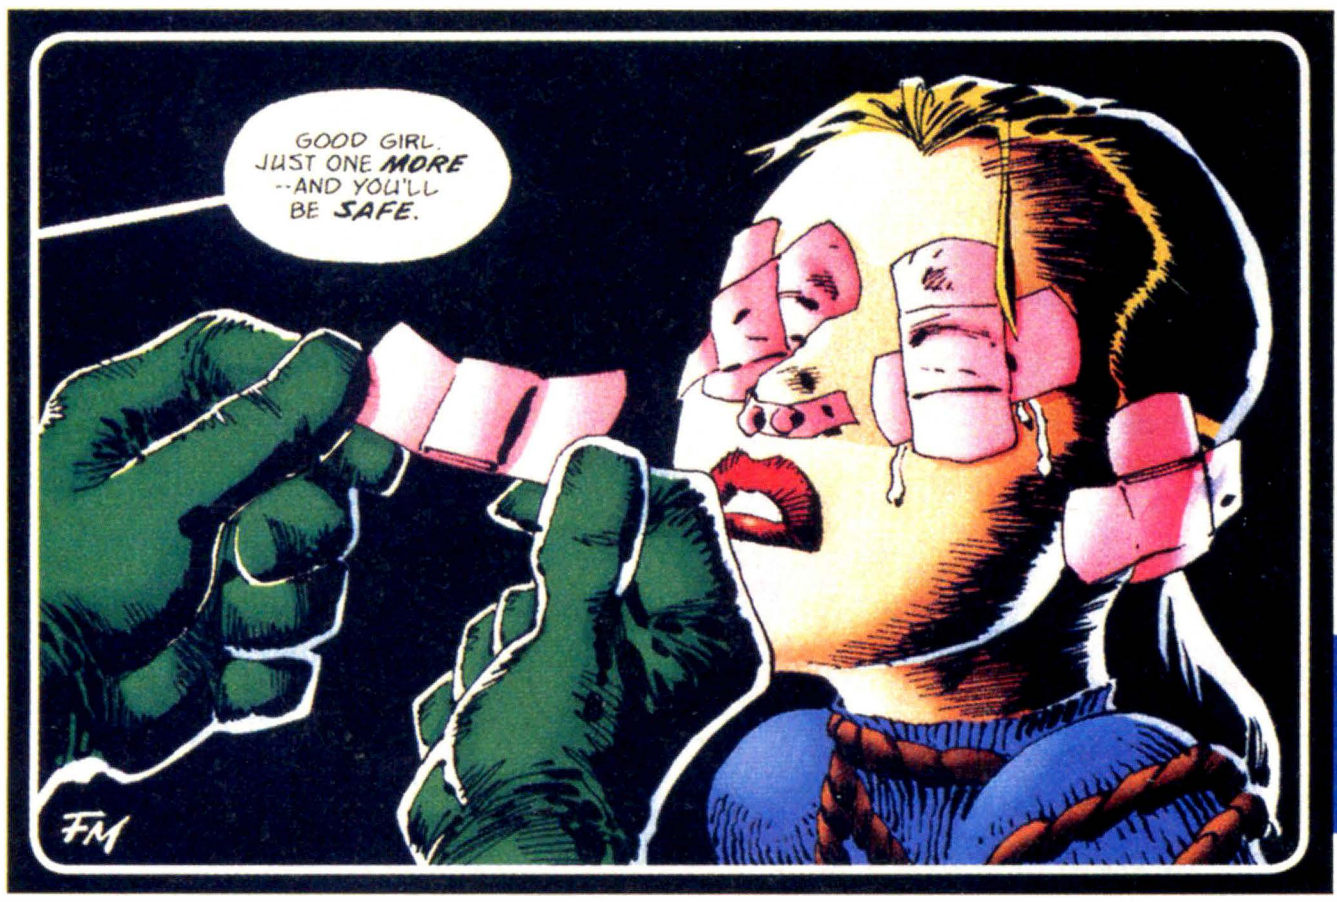
Before his death in 1965 there was still one more chapter to be written of his extraordinary life. In 1948 on a trip to Sweden he discovered formulas for an unusual type of paint that he realized would have tremendous military and industrial applications. Teaching himself basic chemistry, he developed these in the family kitchen. The formulas proved successful and patents were created of these and several other futuristic ideas, most of which have been implemented.

Major Malcolm Wheeler-Nicholson deserves recognition for his prolific creative output and for the tremendous contribution he made to the founding of the modern comic book industry. It's important to the history of this distinctive American art form that the Major's story is added to those of other pioneers. There's obviously much more to this great adventure tale so here's to "More Fun" in the future with comic book history.

The COMIC BOOK LEGAL DEFENSE FUND

By Brady Bonney

The Comic Book Legal Defense Fund serves the comics community by defending the First Amendment rights of retailers, creators, and readers when those rights are threatened.



The CBLDF is a grassroots organization that exists because of the generous support of the comics community. The donations of individuals and small businesses add up to make CBLDF the first responder to First Amendment emergencies when they arise.

The CBLDF was founded in 1986 by artist and publisher Denis Kitchen to help store manager Michael Correa of Friendly Frank's, a shop in Lansing, Illinois. Correa was found guilty of distributing obscene material, fined, and sentenced to one year of court supervision after local law enforcement purchased 15 comics from him.The comics included titles now regarded as classic, including Elektra: Assassin, Love & Rockets, Elfquest, Heavy Metal, and Omaha the Cat Dancer.

As the publisher of Omaha, Kitchen felt a responsibility to help Correa. He said, "Omaha contained adult content, without question. But Omaha was also an artistic and literary success, having received high critical praise internationally. I also knew that the other titles seized could not qualify as pornographic. More importantly, Michael Correa was not charged with selling any of the titles to a minor. The police arrested the manager simply for having 'obscene' books on display."

Kitchen took action by rallying artists including Will Eisner, Robert Crumb, and Frank Miller to create a portfolio of prints to raise money towards an appeal. The appeal was successfully argued by pioneering First Amendment lawyer Burton Joseph, and Correa was a free man. Afterwards, Kitchen had several thousand dollars remaining. Feeling that this would not be an isolated incident, he used it to establish the CBLDF as a permanent institution.

Over the years, the CBLDF has led the charge in dozens of defense cases on behalf of many, including: Paul Mavrides, artist of the Fabulous Furry Freak Brothers against the State of California's Board of Equalization; cartoonist Kieron Dwyer against Starbucks; publisher Top Shelf Productions against U.S. Customs; and DC Comics creators Joe Lansdale, Timothy Truman and Sam Glanzman against the Winter Brothers. The Fund also squelches dozens of small incidents in retail stores and libraries every year by helping defuse situations before they can become a case. Full details on all of these cases can be read at cbldf.org.

Most recently, CBLDF claimed a victory in a case that cost over $100,000 defending Gordon Lee, owner of Rome, Georgia store Legends, against baseless and inflated charges that took three years to resolve. Were it not for the CBLDF, Lee says he almost surely wouldn't still be in business today.

Lee participated in a local Halloween event where he handed out comics left over from Free Comic Book Day instead of candy. One of the comics in his overstock was Alternative Comics #2, a Free Comic Book Day title that included an eight page selection of Nick Bertozzi's graphic novel The Salon, a biographical work about the life of Pablo Picasso, where, for a short scene, Picasso appeared painting in the nude. Even though nudity was present in the book, it was not sexual in nature. A copy of Alternative Comics #2 was allegedly given to a minor at the Halloween function, but instead of being confronted with the accusation and given the opportunity to apologize, Lee was arrested under two felony charges, and five misdemeanor charges.

The Fund hired Begner & Begner, the best obscenity firm in Georgia, to manage the case. Over the course of three years, the firm fought for Lee, first knocking out the felony charges. On the eve of trial, 18 months into the case, prosecutors dropped all charges and then refiled the next day, because they claimed they had named the wrong victim. That morning, CBLDF litigator Alan Begner said, "I have never—as a criminal trial lawyer for thirty years—seen a complete changing of the facts like this. The dismissal of the charges ... reflects the prosecution's admission that everything that was presented as evidence before was untrue." In November 2007, after three years, prosecutors were still unable to prove their accusations against Lee, and created a mistrial during opening statements. District Attorney Leigh Patterson eventually agreed to drop all charges against Lee. Were it not for the CBLDF, Lee would have had to plead guilty to a crime he didn't commit or risk bankruptcy defending himself.

Many of the CBLDF's retail members express that they see their membership as an insurance policy, which they hope never to need. The CBLDF assures that whenever there is a First Amendment emergency, they'll be the first to respond. THE HERO INITIATIVE

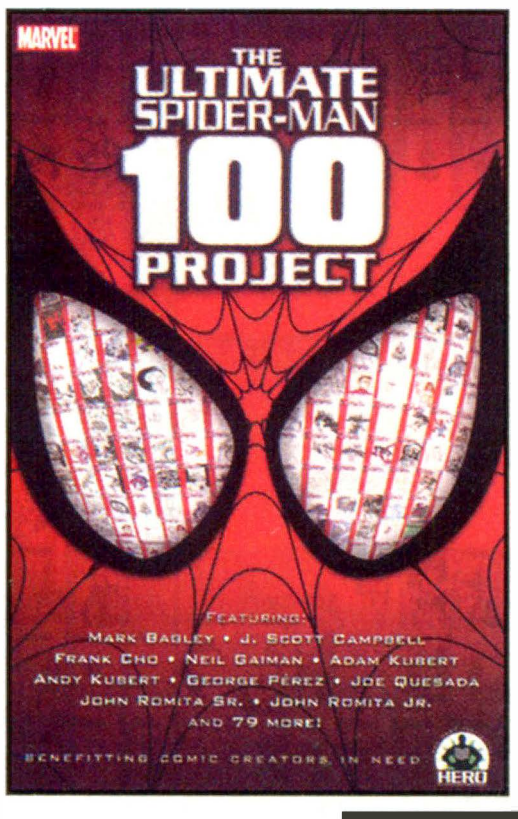
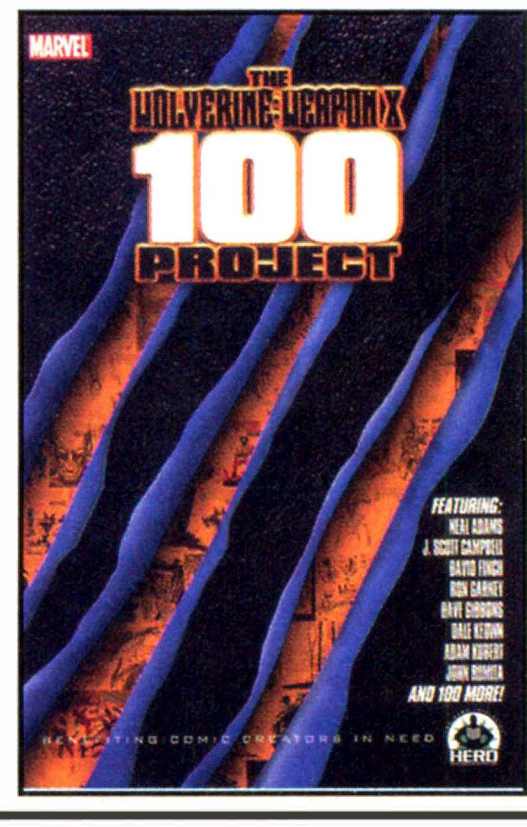
By Charles S. Novinskie



Microsoft was started by Bill Gates during a recession, proof positive that a great idea is truly recession-proof. Comparisons can be made to the late 20th century when the comic book industry was in something akin to a recession, but most frequently referred to as the near death of the comic book industry. Comic companies were closing their doors and creators were left without steady employment.

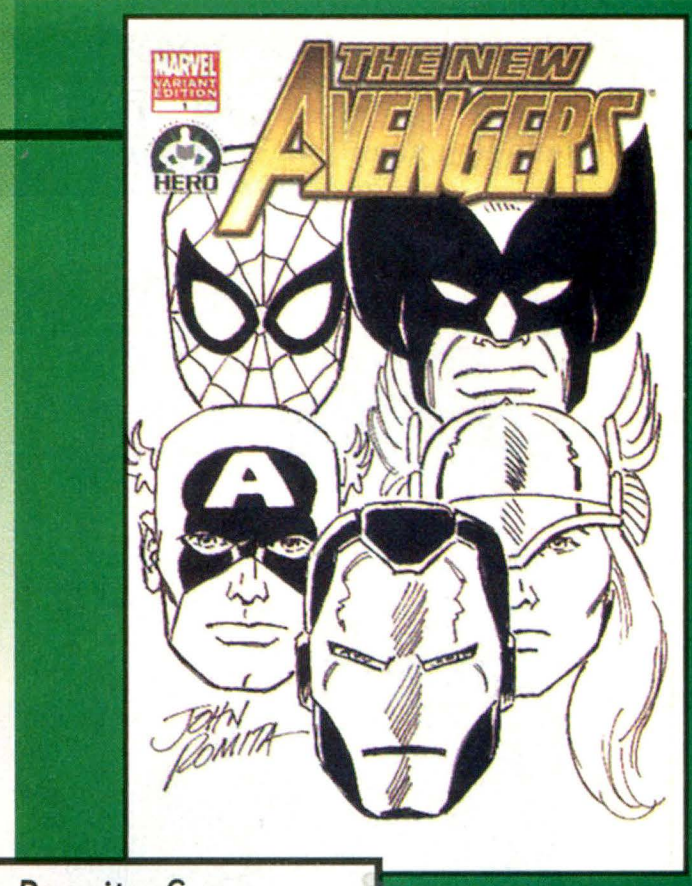
Enter comic journalist Jim McLauchlin and the then-owner of Crossgen Comics, Mark Alessi. Like many great ideas, this one started with two like-minded folks sharing a vision, in this case the desire to help comic creators that have toiled at their trade for decades with no pension, no benefits, no way to support themselves later in life.



Helping creators in need became the focus of the Hero Initiative as they shouted to one and all, "Everyone deserves a Golden Age!", a reference to the organizations original desire to help creators that worked during the Golden Age of Comics, a period from the 1930s through the late 1950s.

A Commitment to Our Roots (ACTOR, as Hero was first known) was born in October of 2000, becoming the first-ever, federally chartered not-for-profit corporation dedicated strictly to helping comic book creators in need.

In reality, anyone that meets the criteria of ever having worked in the comic book industry as a freelance writer, penciller, inker, colorist or letterer for a minimum of 10 years is eligible. Over the past ten years, as the economy worsened, more and more creators needed assistance to stay afloat. The reality was so bad that ACTOR had to change their name in July of 2006 because out of work Hollywood actors were applying for assistance based on the ACTOR acronym (true story). To date, The Hero



Creators donate their talents in various ways to help.

Initiative has provided grants of over $400,000 to numerous comic book creators in need. Hero has also provided short-term, non-interest loans to creators that were between assignments.

While Hero respects the privacy of creators and keeps disbursements confidential, some creators have allowed us to share their stories to help promote the cause: Bill Messner-Loebs was provided assistance when he needed a place to live, Lea Hernandez was helped out after a devastating house fire, and Jim Sanders was provided assistance when all other sources of help were exhausted.

To date over 40 creators have been aided through everything from rough patches to costly, life-saving operations. Some have intimated that without Hero's intervention, suicide might have been their next step without intervention.

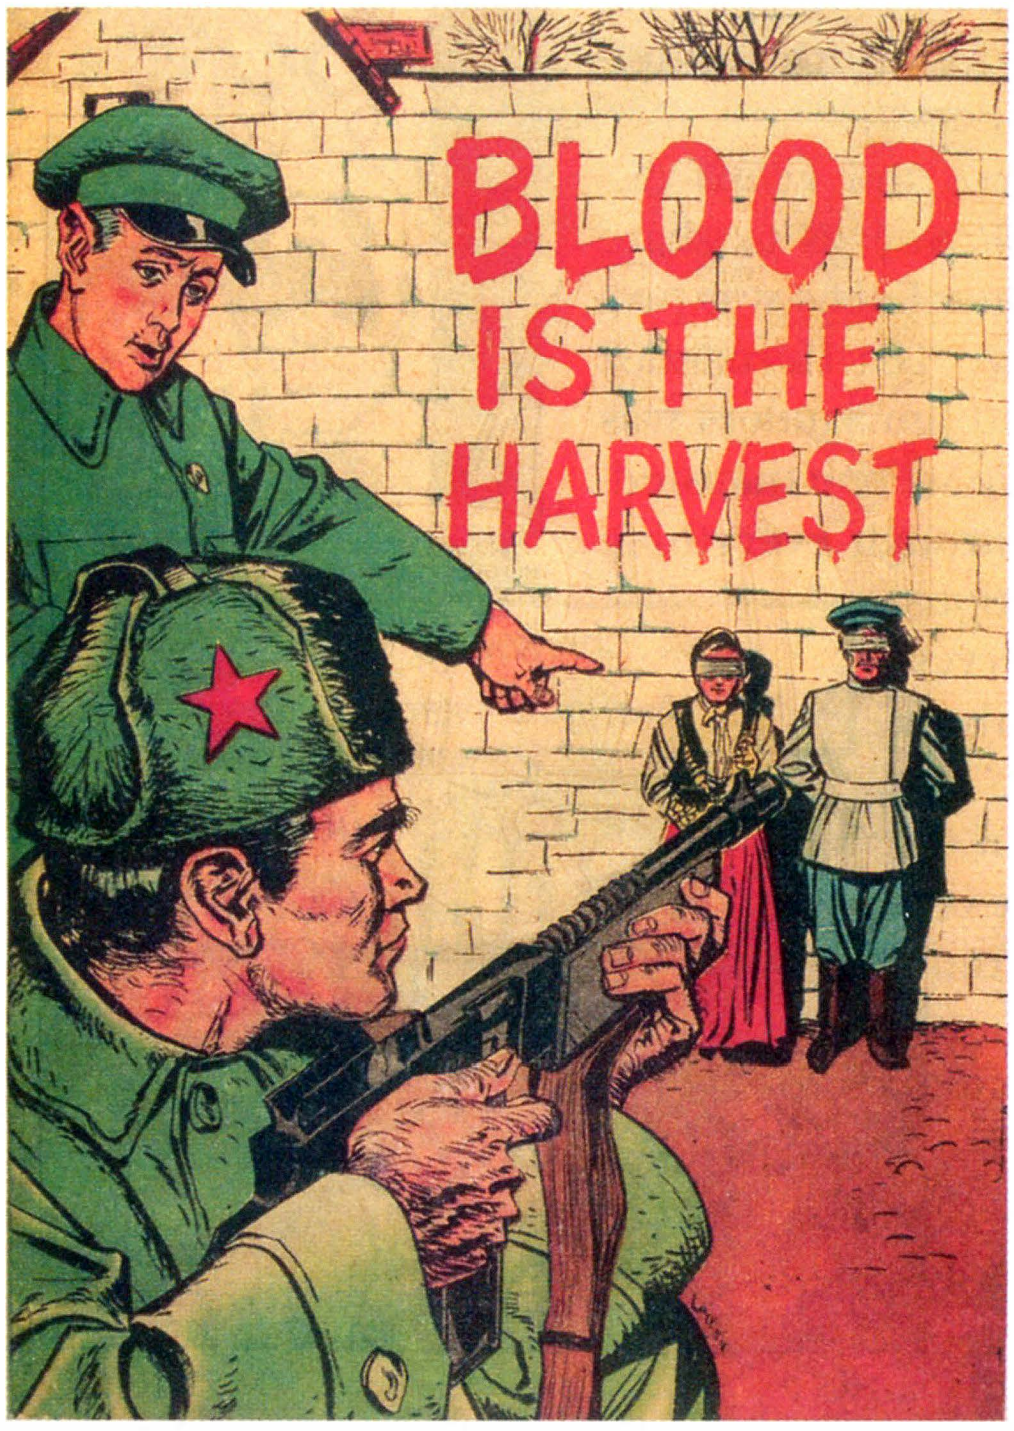
The real beauty is that with the exception of one full-time and one part-time paid employee, the entire organization is run by volunteers. Donations to Hero come from fans, creators, retailers, publishers, distributors and printers. While the need is great, the organization continues to grow and expand in the form of auctions, benefit books and the overall kindness and generosity of people that have a true love for this industry and want to give back and help any way they can.

Governed by a Fund Raising Committee and a Disbursement Committee, The Hero Initiative has board members from the comics industry: the Disbursement Committee (comprised of Walt Simonson, Denny O'Neil, John Romita Sr., Jim Valentino, George Pérez, Howard Chaykin, Roy Thomas, Jim McLauchlin and Charlie Novinskie) votes on disbursing funds and evaluates each creator's situation on a case-by-case basis. The Fund Raising Committee (Jim McLauchlin, Steve Borock, Mike Malve, Brian Pulido, Joe Quesada, Beth Widera, and Mark Waid) finds revenue streams that keep positive cash flow coming in so that Hero can provide for the needs of the ever growing list of creators in need. Many creators and retailers have donated their services, time, and talents for the cause. Poker matches, softball games, creator lunches and even green "Excelsior" wrist bands endorsed by Stan Lee have all contributed to promoting The Hero Initiative cause.



If you'd like to donate or volunteer your time, or know a creator in need, please don't hesitate to contact The Hero Initiative at www.heroinitiative.org.

Charlie Novinskie, an Overstreet Advisor, has been with The Hero Initiative since the early years.

I paid $30,000 for this advertisement.

Imagine what I would pay for your collection...

I want your stuff, and I will pay whatever it takes to get it. Look, if I pay the most, more than anyone, to advertise in this fine publication, I have to hope it serves as indisputable evidence of my commitment to buy your collection and pay more than anyone else again.

Why do ALL the other dealers in this book sell to me?

Because over the past ten years or so I have been buying comics from dealers throughout the country. In fact, over the years I have bought comics from just about every dealer who advertises in this book. I spend millions of dollars a year buying. If professional dealers sell me comics, why can't you? A dealer is extremely knowledgeable, has shown his comics to all kinds of buyers from retail customers to every other dealer in the country at shows. They choose to sell to me because of honesty, financial reliability, and of course the prices I pay.
